Fun Facts about May

See other side for more.

The May birthstone is perfectly suited to the celebration of life blooming everywhere.
The word "emerald" comes from "smaragdus," ancient Greek for "green gem."

Roman author Pliny the Elder, who died in the 79 AD eruption of Mt. Vesuvius, wrote of emeralds in his encyclopedic "Natural History" that "nothing greens greener."

Emerald is often used synonymously with the color green and is even regarded as the very definition of the color.

Emerald is the most valuable variety of the mineral beryl. Primarily green, it may also display tints of yellow or blue. Not enough green, and the stone will be classified as green beryl. Too much blue, and it will be called an aquamarine. Thus, the more pure green color the emerald displays, the more valuable it is. The rarest emerald gemstones will appear to be an intense green-blue color.

Fun Facts about May

See other side for more.

Emeralds, like all colored gemstones, are graded using four basic parameters known as "the four C's": color, clarity, cut and carat weight. Normally, in grading colored gemstones, color is by far the most important criterion. However, in the grading of emeralds, clarity is considered a close second because emeralds tend to have numerous inclusions and surface-breaking fissures. A fine emerald must possess not only a pure green hue, but also a high degree of transparency to be considered a top gemstone.

From Egyptian pharaohs to Inca emperors, emeralds have enchanted royalty. Cleopatra was known to have a passion for emeralds and used them in her royal adornments. Coincidentally, during shooting for the 1963 movie "Cleopatra," Elizabeth Taylor's new love interest, Richard Burton, presented Taylor with an emerald and diamond pendant. The actress wore this famous 23.46 carat emerald for her wedding to Burton the following year.
