September's Feeling Blue

September's birthstone is the sapphire. This gemstone is best known for its striking pure-blue color, but it can range from greenish-blue to violet-blue. Part of the same corundum family as the ruby, they are the second-hardest natural gemstones, with only the diamond being harder.

Corundum is naturally colorless, but trace amounts of elements lead to a range of colors. Outside of red corundum (rubies), all other corundum gems are considered sapphires.

Iron and titanium are responsible for the blue color, and the more iron present, the darker the blue color of a sapphire. Yellow and orange sapphires get their color from iron and chromium, while pink sapphires are a result of high amounts of chromium. A purple color is a combination of all three trace elements.

What's the story, Morning Glory?

September has two birth flowers: the aster and the morning glory.

The aster is a member of the Daisy family, which also includes dahlias, marigolds, and sunflowers. They provide a pop of color as summer turns to fall.

Getting their name for the Greek word, "star," asters come in hundreds of varieties ranging from white and yellow to pink, purple, red, and blue.

Members of the Ipomoea genus, morning glory plants are known as fast-growing vines with a somewhat unique daily schedule: the flowers open in the morning and close up by the afternoon.

The flower's blue and purple colors are the most recognizable, but morning glories also appear in a range of pinks, reds, and whites. The flowers are trumpet-shaped, with five large petals arranged flat around the flower head, making them quite attractive to butterflies and hummingbirds.
